Check each site's creator signup page before you apply. Terms, fees and acceptance change often.

*Ranges are what brands often budget, taken from a 2026 platform comparison by Hirevire. Beginners usually earn at the low end of a range.

> Start with two platforms, not ten. One where brands post briefs (Trend or Upwork) and one where you create a profile (Fiverr or Collabstr).

Part 2. Find brands that already pay for video

A brand that runs video ads has a budget and a reason to need more videos.

Method 1: Meta Ad Library (20 minutes a day)

- Open facebook.com/ads/library and choose "All ads".
- Search a keyword from your niche: serum, sleep app, language learning, eSIM, hotel.
- Open ads that have been running for 3+ weeks. Long running ads usually perform.
- Write down the brand, the Instagram handle and the style of video they use.
- Pitch an alternative of their top ad: a new hook, a different person, a different language.

Method 2: TikTok Creative Center

- Open the Top Ads page and filter by country and industry.
- Look for small and mid size brands with only a few ads. They need creators most.

Method 3: Your own shelf

- List 10 products or apps you already use. Pitch them first: you can talk about them honestly.

Method 4: Local and Southeast Asia brands

- Search Indonesian brands that advertise to English speaking travelers, and English language apps entering Indonesia.
- Bilingual videos are rare. Mention that you can make both versions.

Part 3. Your brand list (fill in 40)

Aim for 8 brands per niche. Use the First Pitch Pack for the messages.

Signs a brand is worth a pitch

- It posts or advertises video regularly.
- It has fewer than 50 videos on its profile, so there is room for more.
- It replies to comments, which means a person is watching the account.
- It sells something you can use or explain.

Signs to skip

- Asks for free videos in exchange for "exposure".
- Wants you to pay for a product and expects a refund later.
- Will not discuss payment before you film.
